

MY FINANCIAL VOICE

Preparing for your career break – think about taking control of your finances

Most of us are too busy with work, family, daily stress to even think about our finances.

You will have heard of Marie Kondo's book "the life- changing magic of tidying up" to enhance your life and discard what no longer brings joy.

Finances are the same – jumbled up, messy savings leave a nagging sense of guilt yet end up at the bottom of the "too hard basket".

Think about taking some time during your career break to understand about savings and investment. As with most things, once you understand the basic language, managing your finances is not rocket science and you do not even have to be numerate!

You can set up tax efficient saving plans for future holidays, school fees as well as pensions and improve the whole family's finances.

Women are good investors - although there are fewer female investors, numerous studies suggest they outperform on returns.

A thought to share with your partner whilst enhancing your long term family savings.
